

$2,000,000 FOR PROMOTION OF PEACE

Income From Andrew Carnegie's Latest Gift to be Expended by Trustees Representing All Religious Denominations—Circulation of Peace Literature and Annual Observance of a "Peace Sunday" Proposed.

New York, Feb. 10.—Andrew Carnegie today gave $2,000,000 to be used through the churches for the promotion of international peace. The income of the fund, about $100,000 a year, will be expended by a board of trustees, representing all the leading religious denominations in the United States.

This gift is in addition to the ten million dollar foundation established by Mr. Carnegie Dec. 14, 1910, "to hasten the abolition of international war." The announcement was made at the close of a luncheon at Mr. Carnegie's home attended by the trustees of the new foundation. The trustees organized "The Church Peace Union," which will be incorporated under the laws of New York state.

The income of the fund will be used to organize the moral power of the churches on critical international questions, to circulate peace literature among the clergy, and to bring about the annual observance of a "Peace Sunday." Conferences of America and Europe will be called to discuss the promotion of peace. When the leading nations abolish war and the fund has fulfilled its mission, the trustees may devote the income to other philanthropic uses.

To Relieve Deserving Poor. In an address to the trustees, Mr. Carnegie said: "After the arbitration of international disputes is established and war abolished, as it certainly will be some day, those who have struggled long and earnestly against misfortune and have not themselves altogether to blame for their poverty. Members of the various churches will naturally know such members well and can therefore the better judge; but this does not debar them from going beyond membership when thought necessary or desirable. As a general rule, it is best to help those who help themselves, but there are unfortunates from whom this cannot be expected.

Judge Rogers a Trustee. "After war is abolished by the leading nations, the trustees by a vote of two-thirds may decide that a better use for the funds than those named in the preceding paragraph have been found, and are free according to their own judgment, to devote the income to the best advantage for the good of their fellowmen."

Among the trustees of the Church Peace Union are: David H. Greer, Episcopal bishop of New York; Cardinal Gibbons, Baltimore; William Lawrence, Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts; Boston; Luther B. Wilson, Methodist Episcopal bishop of New York; Henry Wade Rogers, judge of circuit court, New Haven, Conn.; W. H. P. Faunce, president Brown university, Providence, R. I.

$2,000,000 Yearly for Standing Armies.

Bishop Greer was elected president of the union; Dr. William P. Merrill of New York, vice president; Dr. Erick Lynch, secretary, and George A. Plimpton, treasurer.

The trustees adopted a resolution which appealed to the rulers and statesmen of all civilized lands to abolish war. It pointed out that the combined debt of the world, mostly incurred by the United States, was nearly $37,000,000,000, that the amount expended annually for standing armies and navies was $2,500,000,000, and that 6,244,000 men are kept idle in military service.

War on High Seas Deplored. "The second sad and distressful crime of the day," the resolution declared, "was the destruction of private property in naval warfare. The Teutonic nations, Great Britain and the United States were called upon to meet and agree to inform the world in a friendly manner that they could not look with favor upon war on the high seas."

Copies of the resolution will be sent to each sovereign, president, prime minister, ministers of foreign relations and president of legislatures and other officials of "the world powers."

PROTEST OF BUSINESS MEN GOES UNHEEDED.

McReynolds Determined to Dissolve Pacific Railroad Merger.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Attorney General McReynolds announced today that he expected to proceed with the filing of a suit under the Sherman anti-trust law to dissolve the merger of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads. He had just listened to arguments by the California delegation in congress and business men from San Francisco and Los Angeles. The Californians declared that there was sufficient competition already in the field covered by the two roads, and contended a dissolution of the merger would increase the overhead charges to the shipper and receiver of goods. They asked Mr. McReynolds to grant a delay of 30 days and to hear the side of the shippers. The attorney general, however, told the Californians that he had given ample notice that he expected to file this suit.

COURT PETITIONED TO LIMIT ITS LIABILITY

Owners of Nantucket Disclaim Responsibility for Sinking of Monroe.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 10.—The Merchants and Miners Transportation company today filed in the United States court here its petition for a limitation of liability following the $1,000,000 libel brought against its steamer Nantucket, which is alleged to have rammed and sunk the Old Dominion liner Monroe, off the Virginia coast January 30 with the loss of forty-one lives, the Monroe and her cargo. The Merchants and Miners denies responsibility for the collision, and claims the right to contest that question, but offers to surrender its steamer for the benefit of creditors in case it should be held liable. It also makes counter charges against the Old Dominion Steamship company's steamer Monroe in twelve lengthy specifications.

To Cut Off Free Telegrams.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Confronted with the warning from the contingent expenses committee that the old practice of substituting telegraph for the mails continued, a fertile field might be furnished to the "muck raker," the senate today for an hour debated a proposal abolishing the senatorial privilege of sending telegrams "on official business" at government expense. The matter went over without action.

WHERE LOVE IS, THERE IS HAPPINESS

For a full hour the horses, with their unfeeling sense of direction, had buffeted against the blizzard.

The man in the sleigh allowed the reins to hang loosely from his half-frozen hands. He knew that this was the hour when brute instinct rises superior to human intelligence; but he would rather have lost a hand than admitted as much to the woman at his side.

Suddenly both horses went down simultaneously. The sleigh seemed to turn a somersault, the occupants being shot into icy-cold air, the next moment to be buried in a smothering enveloping bed of soft snow, and his. "We're all right now," said the man cheerfully. "This is Cooper's cut bank—just here. One mile more and we're there."

Then he looked around. "Where are the horses?" he exclaimed suddenly, and staggered off into the swirl.

When he had returned a few minutes later, breathless and perspiring, the woman was sitting in the snow-drift where they had fallen, and his. "We're all right now," said the man cheerfully. "This is Cooper's cut bank—just here. One mile more and we're there."

"You mustn't sit still, dear," he said, and dragged her to her feet almost roughly. Then, catching up a handful of snow, he rubbed her cheek with a vigor that brought a gasp to her lips, but his object was gained.

"I feel tired," said the woman. "Yes, I know, dear, but you must try, try hard, to pull yourself together. We shall have to walk! It's only a mile."

The horses must be all right; they've broken their traces and struck off. We'll follow their tracks and find them.

But the woman's quick wit caught at the slip. "Then—then—this isn't Cooper's cut bank," she faltered. "Once more their eyes met."

"No," said the man slowly. "It can't be. I really went just now to make—sure if it was, and it wasn't."

"Thank you," said the woman quietly and took his hand.

"I'm sorry, Ralph," her voice came at last between little, short gasps, "but I can't go any farther. Something seems to have gone wrong just—just above my heart. I'll—I'll have to rest. And now!" she said as she leaned over her, gasping down with infinite tenderness and utter despair. "I want you to prove that you love me."

"How—how," he said, vehemently, kneeling at her side. "Only tell me what I can do."

"Leave me," was the quiet rejoinder. "Oh, I don't mean anything tragic," she added, as she saw the futility of her request reflected in his face, and she laughed a breathless little laugh. "I mean, just you go on to the ranch, and bring back help."

"Curse such a hole," he muttered irrelevantly. "Grace, if we ever get out of this, it's God's country, mind; God's country or nothing."

He stamped his foot with sudden impotent fury at his own helplessness; then quickly ripping off his coat, he flung it over the woman and caught up her struggling form in his arms.

"Lie still! Lie still!" he hissed. "I mean to carry you."

By sheer dogged endurance rather than physical strength he carried her thus for perhaps half a mile, perhaps a mile, till at length, with a stifled moan, he pitched forward on his face in the snow, a nervous, exhausted heap.

"Are you frozen anywhere? Quick, Grace, tell me! There, can you feel that?"

"What?" asked the woman, drowsily. "I've always heard it's an easy death, and we're together aren't we? It really doesn't matter much. I think I'll go to sleep now." And once more the heavy lids drooped over her eyes.

The cold had penetrated to the woman's brain at last; he realized it and could do nothing. With a supreme effort he thrust his hand into his pocket and brought out a match in his naked hand; then he struck it on his trousers and carefully shielded it from the wind in the hollow of his hand.

He waited until the flame had taken firm hold; then, with a shudder, he applied it to the tender white flesh and sank back unconscious as the woman's eyes opened in sudden pain and terror and her ears caught the faint tinkle of approaching sleigh-bells.

The electric brougham skidded on the slippery asphalt, recovered itself, skidded again a trifle farther and finally came to an ignominious stop in the gutter. The man inside thrust his head out into the choking pea-soup fog with a muttered imprecation. "I'm afraid, sir," began the chauffeur.

"Then it is a hansom," snapped his employer. "Hurry up, man, before we're asphyxiated."

The chauffeur stood once more on the curbstone, his face expressive of a consternation even he was unable to hide. "Kehs not running, sir; can't see ver and—"

"Do you mean to say we must walk in this?"

"Fraid so, sir."

"And now," she said as they dived blindly into the fog, "where on earth are we going?"

"We ought to hit the Edgware road soon," said the man, "and we can take the tube from there."

"Say you think we'll hit the Edgware road," corroborated the woman, and the man looked suddenly down at her with the puzzled frown of one coming after a half-forgotten memory.

"One thing's certain," he continued, with added conviction; "we shall never get anywhere at this rate. Look here, I think I'd better run on and hire anything on two wheels that I meet, if it's only a coster's barrow."

"And leave me here—?" the woman began, and checked herself.

"Unless you care to run with me," suggested the man ironically.

"Hurry up, hurry up," she said. "When he was gone the woman leaned back against a wall and closed her eyes."

Wonder why I should have thought of it tonight," she murmured. "I suppose it was the weird similarity and the still weirder difference; the cause was much the same, but the effect—"

"What can have made us so different in seven—no, eight—years?"

The man kicked the fire into a blaze, and the woman sat dreamily watching the flames, her chin between her hands, a faraway look in her eyes.

"Has it occurred to you yet," she asked at last quietly, "the similarity, I mean, between last night and—"

"A certain night eight years ago?"

The man arose abruptly and stood looking down at her. "Yes," he said. "It has."

"I wondered if you noticed it," she said with a strange diffidence. "I thought you probably wouldn't remember—this." She drew aside a broad necklace of pearls to show a small, puckered scar that it hid.

The man put out his hand and touched the scar.

FRUIT LAXATIVE IF CONSTIPATED, TAKE "CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS"

BEST LIVER AND BOWEL REGULATOR FOR MAMMA, DADDY AND CHILDREN.

If you're headachy, constipated, bilious or stomach is disordered and you want to enjoy the nicest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced, take a tablespoonful of "California Syrup of Figs" tonight and in the morning all the constipation poison, bile and clogged up waste will gently move out of the system without griping and you will feel splendid.

Every member of the family should use this fruit laxative as occasion demands. It is just as effective for grandpa as it is for baby. It simply can not injure. Even cross, sick, feverish children just love its pleasant taste and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to effect a good "inside cleansing."

For thirty years "California Syrup of Figs" has been recommended by physicians as the ideal stomach, liver and bowel cleanser. Millions of families who are well informed use nothing else, but recently there has come a flood of spurious fig syrups, so we warn the public to ask plainly at drug stores for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs" and see that it is prepared by "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no cheaper size. Hand back any "counterfeit" with contempt.

touched the spot gently.

"Yes, I remember it," he said slowly. "We made more fuss last night. Ralph, over having to walk one and a half miles in a fog on solid pavements to a railway station than we did eight years ago plodding knee-deep through snow in a raging blizzard, with the thermometer at 4 degrees below and certain death staring us in the face. Why, is it, Ralph? What has made all the difference?"

"Circumstances, environment, everything here is so small; we're bound to get small too."

"But as small as we were last night?"

"Yes; probably smaller before we're done."

"I hate it!" she exclaimed vehemently. "I hate it all!"

"You want to see the prairie?" The man's eyes held the sparkle of awakened ambition. "Good Lord, so do I! I've wanted to for—yes, the last seven years."

The woman looked up to him. "Why didn't you say so before," she asked reproachfully.

"I thought you—I thought this was God's country, Grace."

"So did I," said the woman; "but I want to go back. Let us go back!"

"The call of the snowbank; we must call it, Grace. I wonder where God's country really is."

"I think it must be wherever love is, Ralph,"—Chambers' Journal.

Wonder what upset your stomach— which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapiesin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.
